Edited by
Maria Kontos, Krystyna Slany, Maria Liapi

Cracow: Jagiellonian University Press, 2010, pp. 326

ISBN: 978-83-233-2473

The volume Women in New Migrations. Current Debates in European Societies offers an overview of research and debates concerning new female migrants in European countries. Despite the effects of globalisation and the Europeanisation both of national migration and integration policies and of transnational research projects, social, economic and political conditions at a national level remain a powerful basis of academic production. Varying conditions for migration, integration and language and cultural specificities create differentiated research and debates.

The contributions in this book show the complexity of the interconnectedness between global and national debates and between feminist and migration discourses, resulting in different outcomes as far as issues of gender and migration are concerned. Analysis of nationally based debates on migration and integration offers an insight into the functioning of different societies, as well as their degree of openness towards new female migrants. This book is a product of the research project “Integration of female immigrants in labour market and society. Policy assessment and policy recommendations” (acronym: FeMiPol) funded by the European Commission within the 6th Framework Programme.
