Images from the Journey Across America]

From the Introduction by Antoni Sulek:

Ludwik Krzywicki (1859–1941), one of the founding fathers of sociology in Poland; an ethnologist and economist; in 1893 he made a journey to the United States in order to visit the World's Columbia Exposition in Chicago and take part in the International Folklore Congress. Moreover, he wanted to explore America, primarily its agriculture, which was his focus at that time, but also issues of education and labour. After his arrival, Krzywicki took a dive into the American world, exploring life in big cities and lives of immigrants from Poland, everyday life and customs, women's emancipation and the U.S. political machinery. He described things he learnt and saw in his correspondences with newspapers in Poland, which were published as a separate volume in 1895.

Za Atlantykiem (Across the Atlantic) is a report from field observation. As an ethnologist, Krzywicki wrote about peoples he knew only from books. However, when in the United States he became an anthropologist of the emerging 'modern' society. Equipped only with a notepad and a pencil in the field, he was an astute observer whose excellent linguistic skills helped him to produce intricate descriptions and analyses. This fascinating book, reissued in 2011 with a preface by Antoni Sulek, shows how Krzywicki made use of his abilities.

From the Introduction by Józefa Hrynkiewicz:

We offer the readers a book containing a collection of studies devoted to the academic work of Ludwik Krzywicki in such important disciplines as anthropology, philosophy, economics, sociology, ethnography, sociology of religion, migrations, statistical surveys, problems of rural areas and farming, women's issues, nation and public service. The book also contains sketches which give readers a picture of Ludwik Krzywicki, his work and people he lived and worked with. This publication was prepared in connection with a conference organised on 11 January 2010 by the Institute of Applied Social Studies at the University of Warsaw, entitled 'A Visionary and a Realist: Commemorating the 150th Birthday of Ludwik Krzywicki'. As such, the book does not aim to exhaust the themes covered in Krzywicki's scholarly work, studies and wide-ranging activities. His works touch upon many issues which need to be brought to attention nowadays, and Krzywicki's involvement in many spheres of social life may provide inspiration for our contemporaries to undertake studies, analysis and civic initiatives.
